About the Seminar

Human-environment conflict has been a major threat to both wildlife and human existence for the past few decades. Most of the human-animal conflicts in West Bengal are recorded from the northern districts. The increase in wild population and the loss of forest land due to various reasons (eg encroachment, human development, etc.) have increased the possibility of human-animal conflicts. The main objective of this seminar is to present the current status of forests, wildlife, encroachment, human development and the latest scenario of human-environment conflict in West Bengal.
